Ganseys are sweaters that developed in 19th-century England as hard-wearing garments for hard-working fishermen. The wool used for knitting Ganseys is not specially oiled, but relies on its natural properties to last. They are knitted in cream 5-ply wool, and are jumpers knitted from 5 ply, unoiled, worsted-spun wool. Traditionally, they were often navy blue, cream or grey. Ganseys are sweaters that developed in 19th-century England as hard-wearing garments for hard-working fishermen. The wool used for knitting Ganseys is not specially oiled, but relies on its natural properties to last. They are knitted in cream 5-ply wool, and are jumpers knitted from 5 ply, unoiled, worsted-spun wool. Traditionally, they were often navy blue, cream or grey.